Description
Right in the centre of Mitsero, close to the village church, this detached single-storey house sits at the heart of everyday village life. Built around 1955 and renovated at a later stage, it pairs the character of an older home with a refreshed interior.

The house is laid out in two parts, each with its own open-plan living room, dining area and kitchen. That gives it a flexible shape: room for a larger household that likes its own corners, or for family who stay close without sharing every meal. In all there are three bedrooms and three bathrooms, all on one level.

The flat plot fronts a public road, so the house has direct road access from the street. Morning coffee and evening meals can unfold in the open-plan spaces, with the village around you.

When you want a change of scene, the lake at the old Mitsero mines is a short drive away, a calm spot for a walk in the hills. It makes an authentic village home with space to arrange life your way.
