Description
Alampra's village centre is only a short drive from this large field. It sits in a setting of scattered homes and open plots, with village life close by and the landscape still open around it.

The land is zoned for residential use and has room for a home of up to two floors. The ground is flat and even across an irregular shape. With its generous size, there is plenty of room to plan a house and the space around it. Electricity, water and telecommunications can be connected to the land.

The land has no direct road access.

Beyond Alampra, the neighbouring village of Dali is also a short drive away, offering an authentic alternative to city living. Level residential land in a village setting, with Alampra close at hand, offers the room to imagine a home built on your own terms.
