Description
Inside the old walls of Nicosia, Taktelkale lies in what has long been the city's traditional commercial centre. It is a neighbourhood of listed buildings, where homes and businesses share the same streets and the life of the old town carries on around them. Restaurants and cafés sit right beside this semi-detached building, and the Town Hall is within walking distance.

The building is set over two levels. The ground floor fronts directly onto the street. Below it, the semi-basement opens onto an internal yard, a private pocket of open air in the middle of the historic centre. Together the two levels give generous covered space in one of the city's most storied quarters.

Picture stepping out of the morning bustle of the old town into that yard, with coffee from the café next door. The building is currently partially occupied.

It offers two levels and a yard of its own, with café life on the doorstep and the walled city all around.
