Description
Built in 1935 with traditional materials, this Agrokipia house carries close to a century of village life within its walls. It offers the kind of character that newer homes rarely set out to capture, set on a 314 m² plot among homes in a residential part of the village.

Inside, the house has been divided into two separate units of similar size. Each has its own living area, kitchen, bedroom and bathroom, so the two sides work independently while sharing one roof and one story. Picture slow mornings in your own kitchen and evenings in your own living area, with the old house holding its history around you.

Everyday life is close at hand. Restaurants, cafés and schools sit right beside the house, so a coffee or the school run needs no planning at all. For weekends, a short drive brings you to the water of the Mitsero mines lake or the open countryside around Klirou.

A house of real character, with the warmth of village life on its doorstep.
